Jennifer Black counsels nonprofit and other tax-exempt organizations and the investors who support them on a broad range of legal, operational, compliance, and administrative issues. She leverages both her legal training and her years of experience working in senior administrative roles with nonprofit organizations to provide her clients with practical and effective advice.

She has significant experience working with hospitals, academic medical centers, health systems, research institutions, long-term care providers, health care providers, research consortiums, and nonprofit organizations on a wide range of regulatory, strategic, and transactional projects.

Immediately before joining Bodman, Jennifer served as a Compliance and Project Manager at a nonprofit health policy and research center. In this role, she offered consulting services, strategic advice, programmatic support, and project management for the establishment and operation of community care networks and hubs. She has also worked with local, state, and federal agencies, in grants and contracting, and on matters of governance and administration.
