Tyler Hines is an associate in Bodman's Real Estate and Construction Law practice groups. He represents developers, general contractors, and subcontractors in transactional matters and dispute resolution.

Before joining Bodman as an attorney, Tyler served as a summer associate with the firm, collaborating with attorneys across several practice areas. In that role, he conducted legal research and due diligence, drafted documents, and contributed to matters involving property development, fiduciary duties, and local government compliance, while supporting the preparation of client-facing materials.

While in law school, he was a student attorney with the Veterans Legal Clinic, where he counseled clients directly and helped resolve a two-and-a-half-year litigation matter and secured an expungement. He also participated in the 1L Advocacy Clinic as a guardian ad litem.

Before beginning his legal career, Tyler served as a surface warfare officer in the United States Navy. In that role, he served as prosecuting officer in two administrative separation proceedings, analyzed adversary threat capabilities, and prepared detailed operational reports and recommendations. His military service strengthened his leadership, analytical, and communication skills.
